European countries fail to provide adequate migrant support services

At the Euro-Mediterranean migration conference, held in Malaga, Spain on 21-22 October, affiliates from Public Services International and the European Federation of Public Service Unions highlighted the need for sufficient government funding to protect the rights of migrants. They also proposed several trade union initiatives, including cross-border trade union exchanges of best practices and improving public workers' professional training on migrant issues.

The conference report noted that there are approximately 18.5 million third party nationals living in European countries today. Rosa Pavanelli (photo, second left) from the Italian union FP-CGIL, said, "We are facing a humanitarian and social crisis that can only be solved through adequate funding for public services that support migrants."

Nadja Salson, EPSU policy officer, added, ""EU policy on migration is a mess that goes against the EU fundamental right to equal treatment. We call for a European framework on migrant workers' rights, based on the UN Convention on migrants of 1990 that has yet to be ratified by EU governments, and for long-term investment in quality public services inside and outside of Europe."

French unions continue strikes

Trade unionists in France have been protesting against the government's cuts in pension rights with a series of general strikes. Strikes have particularly affected transport and fuel supplies. The proposed pension reform has already been approved by the Senate, but unions believe there is still time to reverse or effect changes. The Sarkozy reforms will push the minimum retirement age from 60 to 62. READ MORE >
