A global tax justice movement to end inequality

Public Services International stands with the world's largest labour and non-governmental organisations in "putting world leaders on notice – members of civil society are uniting for tax justice everywhere." A pledge for joint tax justice campaign mobilization, The Fair Share Commitment, has been signed by more than 230 organisations to date, including an impressive number of PSI affiliates. All countries need tax revenue in order to reduce poverty and inequality by funding vital public services such as healthcare and education. There is increasing understanding that tax dodging by big corporations undermines public spending, and that the same actors and unsustainable ideologies are at work in both developed and developing countries.
