Introduction

Several monographs – analytical or descriptive – of the Labour and Socialist International (1923-1940) and the Socialist International (1951-) in different languages exist. Also international co-operation between two or more parties has been analysed, and in this way central aspects of social-democratic/socialist internationalism have been highlighted. However, the smaller Internationals have only, at best, been treated in organizational histories published by and for the organizations themselves. All in all, neither the large nor the small Internationals have been analysed as they saw themselves through their publications or from the point of view of their efforts as seen from the outside. Some of these Internationals have been almost forgotten or are only known by a few, highly specialized, scholars. E.g. the Socialist Union of Central-Eastern Europe (SUCEE) has been forgotten since 1990, the International Federation of the Socialist and Democratic Press (IFSDP) probably does not exist any more, the Asian Socialist Conference played a role in the 1950ies, but who has ever heard of the Interafrican Socialist or can place it in time? But all these organizations have or had quite a role to play. If their efforts were to be analysed and understood, the most important material – the publications of these organizations – had to be located. The material probably existed, but where, in which archives and libraries?

This bibliography aims to register all publications of the various Social-Democratic and Socialist Internationals in the period from 1914 to 2000, whether they are printed or, as in some cases, mimeographed. The criterion for inclusion is whether the publications were intended to be used also outside the organization, that is all material intended for use only internally in the different Internationals has been excluded. For the same reason publications published by the secretaries or presidents of the Internationals, e.g. Camille Huysmans, Friedrich Adler, Albert Carthy and others, more or less on behalf of the Internationals have been included.

The reason for setting the starting point in 1914 is that in his bibliography on the Second International, Georges Haupt made the planned Congress of the International in Vienna August 1914 the last one to be included.¹ Although this bibliography begins in 1914, the activities of the Women's International and the Youth International during the First World War have not been included – the split in the Labour movement, which became apparent on August 4, 1914, left these organizations outside the Social-Democratic sphere. They must in the main be considered part of the left wing which in 1919 established itself as the Communist International. The bibliography on the Communist International by Vilem Kahan, of which only volume 1 has as yet been published, begins in 1919, but may include the material of these Internationals in the forthcoming volumes.² The different Fourth Internationals – of which the various Trotskyist international organizations partly have been covered by Petra and Wolfgang Lubitz³ – also falls outside the scope of the present bibliography.

Even if some of these Internationals were founded before 1914, e.g. the Labour Sports International (1913-) and the International Friends of Nature (1895-), only material published in 1914 or later has been included. It has not been possible to locate material from the International Association of Socialist Lawyers, which probably existed between 1928 and 1940 and the International League of Religious Socialists; furthermore the Secretary of the League failed to react to several letters sent to it. An International Federation of Workers' Travel Association has been in existence during the 1950ies and 1960ies⁴, but no published material has been found. Several international conferences of organizations concerned with Social Tourism were held in the 1950ies and 1960ies and a Bureau International du Tourisme Social was founded in 1963 on the 'Fourth International Congress on Social Tourism'. This Bureau published the periodical 'bits information', but it has not been possible to determine if it was an International according to the criteria used for this bibliography – as yet no printed material from this organization has been found although Conference reports were published. In 1954 an international conference on workers cinemas and films produced by social-democratic organizations and Trade Unions was held in Hamburg.⁵ According to the produced report it seems that the intention was to develop this co-operation, but no further traces have been found, nor has it been possible to document a further reference to hundreds of films registered at the time. Another cultural organization was a bureau of publishing houses of the Labour movement, the International Literary Agency, which actually existed for several years and published a periodical for some years.

The publications by the Asian Socialist Conference and the Socialist Interafrican are included, as are the publications of the SI Fraternal and Associated organizations with two exceptions, and the various European Social Democratic bodies connected with European unification process, unlike other regional bodies, such as the Internationale der Bodensee-Staaten, which was in existence during the 1920ies, and the co-operation between the Social-Democratic parties and Trade Unions in the North-European countries (since 1886). The Internationale Proletarischer Freidenker, the Sennacieca Asocio Tutmonda, SAT, the Internationale des Organisations Culturelles Ouvrières, IDOCO, have not been included in the bibliography as, for various reasons, they were not part of the social-democratic world, although many of the members and officers were. Two of the organizations associated to the Socialist International, viz the World Labour Zionist Federation and the Jewish Labour Bund are not included as they were not considered to be Internationals but as organizations with chapters in various countries. The same goes for the Naturfreunde, which was a Weltverein until in 1950 it constituted itself as an International; accordingly it has only been included after 1950.

Publications of 39 Internationals are listed in this bibliography, out of which 12 are still publishing material today. The basis for the listings is the collections of some of the larger libraries in the International Association of Labour History Institutions (IALHI). Subsequently, a series of libraries have been contacted, and they have supplied additional material. The most recent reports have not provided a great deal of new information, and from this we think we can conclude that although it still is possible to locate some new titles, most of the published material has been located, however, with two exceptions: 1) many of the mimeographed periodicals and 2) the publications of the Party of European Socialists (PES). But it seems probable that the publications of some of the politically more important Internationals have been located and registered in full, especially the material dating from the period between the two World Wars. At least this bibliography provides the fullest compilation of the various publications of the Internationals and so will facilitate future research.

All printed publications, and in some cases also mimeographed material, have been registered. Those mentioned by various sources, but not actually seen, are indicated by an * – many of them are taken from Andrea Panaccione's bibliography⁶. Several periodicals have only been found in incomplete sets in different libraries; it is to be hoped that complete series can be reconstituted and preserved in some way. Periodicals have been registered at the end of each "chapter". Reports, protocols, etc., have not been included among the periodicals, but in general are registered individually in the bibliography. Based on the findings of this bibliography, some microfilms have already been produced by the Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung in Bonn, and are available at the Mikrofilm-Archiv der deutschsprachigen Presse⁷. This has been made possible by a grant from the Erich-Brost-Stiftung, and it is the intention to produce even more microfilms.⁸ The Erich-Brost-Stiftung also supports the publication of this bibliography.

If nothing else is stated, all languages used by the Internationals themselves are included in the registration, but not material from the congresses, for instance, published by the Danish or Dutch Social Democratic parties; these were not materials published by or on behalf of the Labour and Socialist International. An exception has been made for the Party of European Socialists (PES), its predecessors and affiliated bodies. The PES-organizations have published their material in up to 12 languages, so it was decided only to register the English-language editions, but to indicate in which other languages these publications were published. Unfortunately the PES publications have only been preserved in some few libraries, and only in incomplete sets. For this reason it has not been possible to mention all the various language-editions, and quite a lot of the publications have only been found in languages other than English. Finding and collecting this material and making it available for research purposes is a task for the PES and the European IALHI-institutes. Hopefully this will be possible in the coming years as members of the various parties hand over their collections to the archives.

The entries are in chronological order, and they are given in alphabetical order for every year. In some cases it has been impossible to establish the year of publication, and whenever this is the case the titles have entered at the beginning of the "chapter". The list of abbreviations and the List of the libraries in which this material can be found should be a help in locating material – the last line of each entry indicates, in abbreviation, in which library the publication can be found. Even if most of the publications can be found in the IISG, quite a lot only exist in other libraries. Addresses may change, but can probably be found on the internet via the IALHI website [<http://www.ialhi.org/>]. As the participating institutions have, for various reasons, organised their collections in different ways, quite often it is possible to find more material in not-catalogued archival collections – users are reminded to ask for this possibility in the institutions.

In the short notes on the history of the various Internationals it has also been indicated where archival material, as far as has been ascertained, can be found. But possibly other institutions also hold material of interest.

In an annex, various publications addressed to the International and its bodies are registered, but these have only been registered if and when they were found during the search for the real objects. It is possible that there are more of these publications, no thorough search has been instituted, but since they must be considered to be useful for researchers/scholars, they have been included.

The LSI established several Commissions in the period between the two World Wars, which published various reports and periodicals. These have been included in the bibliography under their year of publication. Reports by these Commissions included in the congress material have not been listed separately. The SI established the Socialist International Committee for Latin America and the Caribbean, SICLAC, which as far as could be ascertained published the periodical America Socialista for some years – but only four numbers seem to exist in Europe, and in three different libraries at that. The Social Democratic Group of the Latin American Parliament is a fairly new associated organization to the SI and if the group has published anything it has not found its way to any of the participating libraries. This is also the case for the several other SI Committees, e.g. the SI Committee on Local Authorities, the Africa Committee etc. – see e.g. Socialist Affairs, vol. 49, no.1, p. 37-48.

In January 1993 the European Forum for Democracy and Solidarity was founded on the initiative of the Western European Social Democratic parties to support the transformation and democratisation processes in Central and Eastern Europe and as a platform for co-operation with social democratic personalities and parties in the region. The Forum co-operates closely with the Socialist International, the Party of European Socialists and other social democratic Internationals and is a part of the international social democratic network.

The Forum publishes Country Updates on the countries in the region with difficult obtainable background material, a Newsletter/Calendar (no. 26/December 2000) and Annual Reports. The Forum intends to develop its coverage to include the countries of the Confederation of Independent States⁹.

Notes are written in italics and indicate e.g. that there is additional material or that particular pieces of information has not been found. The items have been registered as the different libraries have reported them – and as there are different libraries and their registrations sometimes go back a long time, differences in the entries occur.

Reprints and microfilms are indicated wherever they have been found. With regard to the LSI-periodical "International Information" and its supplements several checks have been conducted between the three editions in English, French and German. No great textual differences have been discovered between the three editions, even though sometimes a numbers have been used (11a etc). The dates given on the three editions sometimes differ, and the texts may be in a different sequence, but as far as the checks have revealed, the contents are the same over a period. There are fewer pages in the English edition as English texts take up less space than both French and German. Some numbers – especially in "Documents and Discussions" – use the original language in all three editions. A microfilm of the English and German editions has been produced based on the holdings of the IISG.

The archives of the Labour Party – now in the National Museum of Labour History in Manchester (Labour History Archive & Study Centre) – have been much used in the historiography on the LSI and SI as the Labour Party played a prominent role after both World Wars in re-establishing the International. Richard Storey has made an inventory of the holdings¹⁰, although the holdings of the Labour History Archive & Study Centre now are more extensive than they were in 1973, altogether there are 42 boxes of material. The archives of the LSI in the IISG have been registered, and an inventory has been published.¹¹ An early overview of the publications of the LSI and a very valuable chronological list of articles on the LSI in the magazines of the contemporary Labour movement, including some brochures on the same theme, have been published by Andrea Panaccione in the already mentioned bibliography.

The co-operative effort of the IALHI institutions has made this bibliography possible, but a number of non-members have also contributed. It has required an imaginative effort to find this material and locate it. As will be seen, the material is not completely present in any library although some have more than others. It will also be seen that the various collections are more complete for some years and for some organizations than for others. It is astonishing that the years after 1960 show a poorer percentage of material found than the first 20 years from 1913-1933 – or so we must presume. Only the smaller Internationals, who had their strongholds in Germany, and who accordingly lost the vast majority of their members in 1933 and in the following years lost even more of them through the takeover of Austria by the Austro-Fascists in 1934, and the occupation of the 'Sudetenland' in 1938 by the Nazis show a lower percentage. It is highly deplorable that these publications were not collected by the Labour history institutions or handed in by the organizations. Because of these omissions, a lot of material has been lost. The bibliography is the very first step to find out what was published, and where access can be had to these publications. The IALHI should make it a task to try to find and make available more of the missing material.

The IALHI is aware of the fact that this bibliography is only the first step in locating and re-finding the publications of the Internationals. To facilitate this process, IALHI has decided to publish this bibliography knowing that it is incomplete. But we believe it will be easier to find more by means of a printed version. Only later we intend to produce a data-base which can be consulted on the Internet. This next step will be handled by the Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung which will make this database available in about two years time – hopefully it will be more complete in comparison with the present version. IALHI welcomes every help it can get, and we ask anybody with knowledge of more publications to contact the Bibliothek der Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung¹² – the URL address will be: <http://library.fes.de/library/english/si.html>. In connection with the Microfilm-Project conducted by the FES, it is important that the FES be notified even of single, isolated numbers of the periodicals listed – and, of course, also of new items. Electronic Press-services etc published by the existing Internationals are already collected by the Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung and will be available sometime during 2001 via the homepage of the Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung.

Considerations on the Development, Function and Role of Social-Democratic Internationalism

In continuation of the migrations of mediaeval journeymen, the 19th century saw considerable migratory activities on the part of European workers. Immediately prior to the outbreak of the revolutions in Europe in 1848, France alone had a foreign population of 850,000 people, mainly skilled workers and artisans, if it is indeed possible to distinguish between the two groups. A large proportion of these migrant workers consisted of German journeymen, who went to Switzerland, London, and especially Paris.¹³ In the two metropolises and in several Swiss towns there was a sufficiently high number of foreigners for them to establish viable associations of radically thinking workers, partly on a national basis, partly as cross-national associations, such as, for examples, 'The Fraternal Democrats' in London.

It is an established fact that this nascent radical Labour Movement gave rise to concern among the ruling classes; attempts were made to restrict or even ban migration, and certainly to prevent the setting up of workers' organizations, for which reason they had to operate clandestinely during these years. A rich literature exists dealing with these associations, particularly the documentation and analyses of 'Bund der Kommunisten', an organization that was of direct importance for the development of internationalism, must be emphasized.¹⁴

More important than migrating journeymen is, of course, industrialization which slowly emerged from the middle of the century, and created the class for whom international organization was to be of decisive importance. The emerging working class took an interest in the International Working Men's Association to the extent that and for as long as it was capable of managing activities to prevent the importation of scabs, and could actively assist the workers engaged in industrial action. For quite some time, the IWA was able to do that¹⁵. This development was, to a certain extent, halted by the dissolution of the IWA after 1872. Endeavours to maintain international cooperation were continued from various quarters, and several congresses were, in fact, held but no new International saw the light of day until the newly formed labour parties and trade unions met at the Paris Congress in 1889.¹⁶

The theoretical position developed at the 1866 congress of the IWA determined the Marxist stance to the role of trade unions in the overall Labour Movement for a long time to come – as a matter of fact, this resolution has had a role to play until the present times. It was only during the years immediately before the turn of the millennium that the ties between the trade unions and the political components of the Labour Movement were decisively weakened even in countries where Marxism had not, to be sure, played a prominent role, but where it had had an ongoing impact since the end of the 19th century, without the functionaries of the Labour Movement having been particularly aware of this impact.

However, international experience was to have implications for the development: as a result of this comprehensive worker migration, the members of the working class had an unarticulated understanding of the nature of capitalism in some of those respects that directly affected workers: they had themselves experienced that contradictions between work and capital existed throughout the industrialized world, that, universally, attempts were made to keep working hours long and wages low, that state and capital cooperated towards these ends, in short, that conditions for working people were more or less identical no matter what country they found themselves in. This basis of experience was crucial and impacted on the acceptance of the general Marxist theory in wide working-class circles because Marx and Engels were able to formulate the international experience of workers into a coherent theory acceptable to these groups; this, in turn, provided a basis for a more or less profound acceptance and appropriation of the other components of the theory in the working class. However, during this time, i.e., the 1880s and 1890s, industrial workers accounted for a relatively modest proportion of the total population, with the exception of countries like Great Britain and Belgium.

With the growth of the movement over the following decades leading up to the First World War, the need for coordinating trade union as well as political activities also grew. In 1886 the first regional workers' congress took place in Gothenburg, Sweden, one result of which was formalized cooperation between the three Scandinavian Labour Movements – cooperation which in some cases led to the establishment of pan-Scandinavian trade unions, and in other cases to the transfer of considerable funds in connection with industrial action. One such example was a four-months long conflict in Denmark in 1898, another the Swedish large-scale strike in 1909, and many others. From the late 1880s, International Trade Secretariats¹⁷ saw the light of day; the political International developed during the years after 1900, and from 1901, national federations began developing mutual cooperation which, a short time before 1914, was institutionalized in the International Federation of Trade Unions. However, at the same time, such institutionalisation led to a weakening of spontaneous internationalism; this was almost inevitable in light of the fact that the Labour Movement had become a mass movement which, in order to be able to handle its tasks, had found it necessary to employ a number of functionaries, working for the movement in various capacities such as editors of dailies and the many different periodicals, as chairmen of trade union organizations, as statisticians, etc. The phenomenon is well known and well described by various sources, often it has been assessed in highly contradictory terms since, around 1910, Robert Michels evolved his initial analysis of the oligarchic trends of the Labour Movement.¹⁸ The internationalist position did not die, but it did become less vigorous, its role was weakened as a result of its institutionalisation.

The First World War also constituted the end of an epoch in the development of the Labour Movement; however, internationalism continued to play an important part. This became particularly clear in the support given by French and British workers to the revolution taking place in Russia. By various forms of action they prevented French and British troops from intervening in the civil war on the side of czarist and ‘white’ forces.

In 1919 an attempt was made to revive the Internationals: the III International was, in fact, established in Moscow and existed until 1943 despite the fact that Stalin had apparently judged it as being misplaced at a time when it was more important that national Communist parties develop an independent policy and not act as sections of the International.¹⁹

Similarly, the Social-Democratic parties attempted to reestablish cooperation, but it took from 1919 to 1923 before the different parties were able to reach so much agreement that a new International was formed: The Labour and Socialist International (LSI), with institutionalized cooperation with the Socialist Youth International (SYI) and the International Federation of Trade Unions. The SYI, in particular demonstrated an positive will to cooperate across frontiers and to try to develop shared methods, for instance, for bringing up working class children²⁰, and to develop a new workers’ culture, an attempt which characterized organized working-class youth during the interwar years – something for many years to come which left its mark on those affected, as it already had done on the participants of the socialist youth organizations from before World War I.

A number of parties and organizations remained outside these Internationals. They tried to advocate a route to Socialism different from that chosen by the two larger Internationals. They never developed into mass organizations, nor were they ever capable of developing a common theoretical base.²¹

Under the Social-Democratic umbrella, the interwar years saw the birth of a series of new international associations, and their publications are among those registered in the present bibliography. To some extent, these Internationals shared their foundations with those which arose again following the Second World War: they reflected the fact that in and around the Social-Democratic Labour Movement various occupational and cultural activities arose contributing towards disseminating the ideology of this movement to broader layers of the public, and through them attempts were made to integrate ever larger groups into the activities of the movement. Apart from the Workers’ Sports International they were not large-scale organizations, and they developed virtually no bureaucratic structures, but survived on the basis of efforts made by some few activists.

During the interwar years it is, however, characteristic of Social-Democratic workers’ internationalism that it could exercise no organizational sanctions against its affiliates. It was, in any case, one of the major differences between the LSI and the centralist Comintern that the latter could, in fact, impose sanctions on its affiliates. Organizational internationalism – including the LSI and the SYI – was based on consensus. Increasingly, over the interwar years, national Social-Democratic parties, who were in government office, rejected any possibility of providing the International with anything but powers of moral persuasion vis-à-vis the actually doable policies as perceived by the government parties in the individual countries. The development resulted in or was a consequence of political discord between the parties: in order to remain in 'power', the government parties felt it necessary to take account of other considerations than those acceptable to the other parties in the International. The problem of coupling the struggle for power in the parties' own countries to fundamental solidarity with and assistance to the movements of other countries was not solved during the interwar years, and the scope for action of the International gradually shrank, and in the autumn of 1939 it was, in fact, dissolved. Until that time, it had acted as an important forum for information and discussion.

As early as in the final phase of the Second World War, attempts were made anew to reestablish international cooperation between the Social-Democratic parties; the youth organizations reestablished their own International in 1946, and some of the other Internationals tried to resume cooperation as if nothing had happened.

Between May 1946 and March 1951, a total of 13 international conferences were held by Social-democratic parties developing positions on the different topical problems and matters of principle, thus preparing for the establishment of the Socialist International in 1951 in compliance with the wishes of most Social-Democratic parties. The SI saw itself as the successor of the I. International (IWA), which was clearly demonstrated at the SI's 9th congress in Brussels in 1964 on the centenary of the founding of the IWA. However, it is plain that the Social-Democratic parties, as distinct from the trade union Internationals, are united only by a more or less identical basic position in relation to international problems, by a common social-affairs stance, but in many topical or urgent problems they make up their own minds based on the perceived interest of their nation state – little or no attempt is made (any longer) to link national and international tasks into a common struggle. However, this basic common position often led to similar developments, as became clear from the amendments made to several of the parties programmes from the late 1950s and onwards. The parties did not only react simultaneously to changes in societal developments by evolving new theoretical positions, they also reacted simultaneously by modifying the structure of their information activities vis-à-vis the party members and lay officers. Similarly, several parties reacted more or less identically to the new political framework conditions of the 1970s by placing themselves "left of centre" in the political spectrum.

One factor playing a not unimportant role was the activities of the International Labour Organization. Significant functions that national trade union centres had previously had to carry out as part of their international tasks, were now carried out under the auspices of the ILO. Because of the tripartite structure of the ILO, international cooperation in the field of labour-market conditions changed its nature, and this weakened insights into working conditions abroad and the need for concrete international action.

Until the 1950s the special Social-Democratic ideology was strong enough for the parties to attempt new initiatives in the field of – especially cultural – cooperation. However, practical circumstances prevented the establishment of any alternative Social-Democratic news and press services for the papers published by the Social-Democratic labour movement which – at the time – remained significant. The International Federation of the Socialist and Democratic Press held a number of conferences and published various periodicals to disseminate information of interest to the Labour press, but without a sufficient strength of impact to secure the activity over a protracted period.

It goes without saying that internationalism is not a constant factor whose nature is forever firmly fixed. Rather, it is an insight based on experience, an insight that might fade if it is no longer based on actual experience of the type originally made by migrating journeymen. Together with the various phases of capitalist development, internationalism also undergoes changes during which it can deteriorate into a purely notional position void of any practical implications. This does not mean that it will have lost all meaning in the working class, something which became clear during the interwar years vis-à-vis refugees from Fascism who were aided by other working-class and Labour organizations. One type of aid provided by the LSI was the establishment of the Matteotti Committee, and in spite of the prevailing high rates of unemployment in the 1930s, comprehensive xenophobia or racism did not afflict the working class. These phenomena were certainly not unknown in middle-class strata, but unlike what was to be the case in the 1980s and 1990s, they were not echoed in the working class.

Migration by journeymen and others was interrupted in Europe by the outbreak of the First World War and were, subsequently, hampered by frontiers being closed, by different types of labour-market regulation which have all prevented lively mobility across national and language borders. Regulations were, of course, determined by the cyclical needs of the labour market/capitalist system to which the working class is subject. At the same time, technological developments during the period under review have, at times, lead to concentration on national markets. In the 1970s, at least, an upswing in international solidarity activities could be observed, finding expression, for example, in connection with the reestablishment of Social-Democratic mass parties in Portugal and Spain, in the support given to the Sandinist movement in Nicaragua, in the support allocated to the liberation struggle in southern Africa and elsewhere. Social-Democratic organizations – including the Socialist International – played a decisive role in this connection.²²

Solidarity activities seem to have been replaced by activities more orientated by humanitarian considerations, but nevertheless there is still a fundamental position in the Labour Movement concerning the importance of internationalism. Whether the new European trends, including European Works Councils in multinational companies and the right to free movement of persons within the external frontiers of the European Union, will entail a new basis for internationalism, at least in the core groups of the Labour Movement remains to be seen. However, it is not certain by any means that the present-day Labour Movement will be capable of reacting politically and strategically adequately to the internationalization of capital and the fluctuations of world markets. The Internationals are there – can new life be breathed into them? But irrespective of whether and how they can be used, their development and publications constitute a store of significant experience, and this bibliography should constitute a tool in connection with the analysis of the historical manifestations of internationalism in the Labour Movement Internationals. Thus, it is hoped, it will contribute towards clarifying problem formulations in the current situation.

In addition to providing bibliographical information, the purpose of the bibliography is to contribute towards improving the conditions for research into Labour Movement history. In the present situation scholarly and theoretical efforts constitute an important factor in the development of a framework for continuing emancipatory activities of the Movement.

The International Association of Labour History Institutions (IALHI) organizes archives, libraries, document centres, museums and research institutions specializing in the history and theory of the labour movement internationally. IALHI was founded in 1970 by the Arbetarrörelsens Arkiv (Stockholm), the Deutscher Gewerkschaftsbund (Düsseldorf), the Friedrich Ebert Stiftung (Bonn), the Internationaal Instituut voor Sociale Geschiedenis (Amsterdam), the Labour Party (London), the Schweizerisches Sozialarchiv (Zürich) and the Trade Union Congress (London), among others.

Today IALHI has approximately 100 scholarly institutions and organizations in the form of e.g. archives, libraries, museums from all over the world as its members. Bureau Socialiste International; International Socialist Bureau; Internationales Sozialistisches Bureau

The Socialist International was the descendant of the International Workingmen's Association, founded in 1864. After the virtual demise of the First International in 1872, socialist parties were founded in various European countries. These founded the new International, the II International, at a Congress in Paris in 1889. The International was a loosely-knit organization until the establishment of the International Secretariat in 1900. The International Bureau composed of representatives of the leading parties acted as its leadership. It was this body, organised by its Secretary (first Victor Serwy, then Camille Huysmans from 1906 on), that determined the policy of the International between congresses.

The First World War created an unprecedented crisis in the International; the support for pursuing the war given by the socialist parties of the belligerent countries to their governments conflicted with the traditions of the Socialist International.

With the outbreak of the first world war, the International ceased to speak on behalf of the whole international movement. There were four Inter-Allied Labour and Socialist Conferences during the war (1915, 1917, and in February and September 1918, all of them held in London). The Left-wing groups and parties opposing the war organised three international Conferences; in Switzerland at Zimmerwald 1915, at Kienthal in 1916, and the third in Stockholm 1917.

An attempt to organise a universal international Conference in Stockholm in 1917, initiated by various Socialist parties of neutral countries and the Secretary Camille Huysmans, failed.

Conférence Internationale Ouvrière et Socialiste; International Labour and Socialist Conference; Internationale Arbeiter- und Sozialisten-Konferenz

Shortly after the failure of the Stockholm Conference a new attempt was made to organise a universal Socialist Conference. The initiative came from the Inter-Allied Socialist Parties Conference (London, February 1918). After the Armistice, this led to the organization of the Labour and Socialist Conference in Bern (February 1919). It was the most representative Socialist Conference since Basel (1912) with 102 representatives from 26 countries. But it was considered a 'Rump' conference in the absence of some important parties, from the right as well as from the left (such as the Russian Bolcheviks, the Social-Revolutionary Party and the Belgian Workers' Party).

The documents of the conference are published by Gerhard A. Ritter (ed.): Die Zweite Internationale 1918/19. Protokolle, Memoranden, Berichte und Korrespondenzen, J.H.W. Dietz Nachf., Bonn 1980. Archival material in AAN, IISG, LHASC

Deuxième Internationale; Second International; Zweite Internationale

After the wartime split of the international socialist movement and the foundation of the Communist International, the parties still in the Second International held four Conferences in 1919-20, formally under the auspices of the International Socialist Bureau. Finally, at the Geneva Congress (1920) only seventeen parties were represented, including the British Labour Party, the (Mehrheits-)Sozialdemokratische Partei Deutschlands (MSPD) and the social democratic parties of Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Belgium and Poland. The Congress decided to move the secretariat from Brussels to London. Reports of the conferences in Amsterdam and Lucerne and the resolutions of these conferences are published in: Gerhard A. Ritter (ed.): Die Zweite Internationale 1918/19. Protokolle, Memoranden, Berichte und Korrespondenzen, J.H.W. Dietz Nachf., Bonn 1980.

International Working Union of Socialist Parties; Internationale Arbeitsgemeinschaft Sozialistischer Parteien; Union des Partis Socialistes pour l'Action Internationale

Attempts to revive the Second International at the Geneva Congress in 1920 failed owing to the refusal of a number of parties (among them the Austrian, French, the German Independent Social Democratic Party, the Independent Labour Party of Great Britain and the Swiss Social Democratic Party) to participate, because they strove for an International which united both Socialists and Communists. These parties held a conference in Vienna in 1921 and formed the International Working Union of Socialist Parties (referred to as the Second-and-a-half or Vienna International). Friedrich Adler was elected Secretary. Herbert Steiner: Die Internationale Arbeitsgemeinschaft Sozialistischer Parteien

At a meeting between the Executives of the Second International and the Vienna International in Paris in February 1922, a proposition was accepted to invite the Executive of the Communist International to a Conference in order to examine the possibility of forming an all-inclusive International. Representatives of all three Internationals then met in Berlin in April 1922. A joint committee was established, the so-called Comité des Neuf, but no agreement was reached.

L'Internationale Ouvrière et Socialiste; Labour and Socialist International; Sozialistische (und) Arbeiter-Internationale

After the defeat of the unification attempts, the Second International proposed to the 'Vienna International' at a Conference held in London in June 1922 renewed co-operation in summoning a General Congress of Socialist and Labour Parties. It was held in Hamburg in May 1923 and was attended by 424 delegates representing 43 Socialist parties.

The Hamburg Congress adopted the name: Labour and Socialist International for the reconstituted International. It attempted to weld the International into a closely knit union, capable of taking effective international action. By virtue of the powers vested in it, it was possible for the International to impose obligations upon affiliates. The organs of the International were the Congress, the Executive Committee, the Bureau, the Administrative Committee and the Secretariat. It was pledged by its constitution to maintain close contacts with the International Federation of Trade Unions and, in fact, both Internationals co-operated closely in joint meetings of their Executives and in frequent joint Conferences and actions.

The Congress elected Arthur Henderson President of the Executive; Friedrich Adler and Tom Shaw as joint Secretaries. Adler remained as secretary throughout the whole period. London was chosen as the seat for its headquarters; in 1926 they were moved to Zurich, and in 1935 to Brussels.

International Union of Socialist Youth Organizations/Internationale Arbeitsgemeinschaft sozialistischer Jugendorganisationen

The Union was founded at a conference in Vienna in February 1921 under the auspices of the International Working Union of Socialist Parties (The Vienna International). Members were, among others, the Socialist Youth organizations in Germany (USPD), Austria, France, Czechoslovakia (DSAP), Yugoslavia, Hungary, and Latvia. Karl Heinz became its secretary. In 1923 it merged with the Social-Democratic Young Workers' International at a conference in Hamburg and became the Socialist Youth International. No archival sources are known.

L'Internationale de la Jeunesse Socialiste/Socialist Youth International/Sozialistische Jugend-Internationale

The International was founded at a congress at Hamburg 1923 in connection with the unification congress of the two Social-Democratic Internationals. The SYI had most of its affiliates in Europe as it shared its strengths with the parties of the LSI. Until 1933 its headquarters were in Berlin, after that they were moved first to Prague (until 1938) than to Paris (1938-40). The secretary general for the whole period was Erich Ollenhauer. The SYI cooperated closely with the LSI. The archives of the SYI are in the IISG in Amsterdam, although other archives should be consulted as archival material may be found in the archives of the national organizations. A microfilm of the German edition of International Socialist Youth Correspondence has been made. The known holdings of the English and French editions of the periodical are very incomplete, the Danish edition was published for the years 1937-1940 only.

L'Internationale de l'éducation socialiste/Socialist Educational International/Sozialistische Erziehungs-Internationale

From 1922-1924 the International was an Internationale Arbeitsgemeinschaft, but in 1924 was founded as the Socialist Educational International with socialist children's organizations in various countries as its affiliates. In 1930 close co-operation with the Socialist Youth International and the Labour Sports International was institutionalised. The SEI was re-organised after 1934 and had its headquarters in France. After the occupation of the 'Sudetenland' only few members were left. The archive of the SEI-secretariat in Paris was lost during the Nazi Occupation. The Falcons International is the continuation of the SEI.

Arbeiter-Radio-Internationale (A.R.I.)/Internationale Ouvrière de Radiodiffusion/Labour Wireless International

The International was founded in September 1927. Apparently the first number of the Nachrichtenblatt was the only one published. Nothing has been found on its history and neither has archival material except for some fragments in the LSI and Labour Party archives. During the first few years, headquarters were in Vienna, later in the Netherlands. For some time the periodical of the Arbeiter-Radio-Bund Deutschlands was also the Publikationsorgan of the International; it is possible that other national publications included material of/by the International.

International Socialist Abstainers' Union, ISA/Internationale Sozialistischer Alkoholgegner, ISA/League Internationale des Socialistes antialcoholiques

National workers' abstainers' organizations had existed for quite some time before they succeeded in founding an International in 1928. The second conference was held in Dresden in 1931, but after 1933 the International had to move its headquarters, which eventually were located in Stockholm (1934). At irregular intervals, the ISA published a Bulletin in German and Pressmeddelanden in Swedish - it was planned to publish these in English and French, but this was not possible for financial reasons. The fourth conference was held in Helsinki in 1939, and in 1949 another in Stockholm/Lunnevad.

Internacio de Socialistaj Esperantistoj, ISE

The first international workers' Esperanto organization was founded in 1906, refounded in 1921 in Prague as Sennacieca Asocio Tutmonda, SAT. The SAT was a non-partisan organization, but for some years was strongly influenced by its communist members, who left the SAT as late as 1932 to found the marxist orientated Internacio de Proleta Esperantistaro, IPE. After 1945 the SAT was refounded as a non-partisan International.

At a conference on 4 June, 1933 in Vienna, the social democratic faction in the SAT decided to found its own International, Internacio de Socialistaj Esperantistoj, ISE, and left the SAT. The ISE had its first headquarters in Vienna, but had to move after February 1934, first to France then to the Netherlands. The ISE had national sections in Austria, Danzig, Finland, France, Great Britain, Hungary, the Netherlands and Czechoslovakia (the German organization had participated in the preparations but had been dissolved before the International was founded) and members in several other countries, e.g. the USA; its last activities are recorded for 1938. Chairmen: Ede Gischitz (Hungary) 1933-34, F. Chamarre (France) 1934-1936, Jan van der Landen (the Netherlands) 1936-. Franz Jonas (Austria) was Deputy chairman 1933-1934. Secretaries: Johann Weinhengst (Austria) and L. van Vlaardingen (the Netherlands) 1936-.

It was published monthly until February 1934 and after that irregularly in La Rochelle until December 1936, from May 1937 in Rotterdam to the end of 1938. Editors were Ferdinand Seidel till 12/1933, Johann Weinhengst for no. 1-2/1934, F. Chamarre 1934-1936 and Jan van der Landen 1937-1938.

Internationale der Arbeitersänger, IDAS

The International was founded at a conference in Hamburg in 1926 on the initiative of the German organization. Until 1932, 17 organizations in 14 countries had joined the IDAS - outside Europe Palestine and the USA. The IDAS had plans to establish a publishing house, but only the initial steps were taken. The rise of the Nazi Party to power in Germany was a hard blow to the International as about 50% of the membership were Germans. Nevertheless, the International carried on until 1938 with headquarters in the CSR and after the 1938 conference, in the Netherlands. But the occupation of the Netherlands by the Nazis in 1940 had as a consequence the dissolution of the IDAS. No archival material seems to have survived.

In 1946 the Internationale des Organisations Culturelles Ouvrières, IDOCO was founded by the then existing Workers' choir-organizations. Headquarters were originally in the Netherlands, but were moved to Germany in 1963. The German organization refused to be a political, democratic-socialist, organization and as it was dominating the International, the IDOCO also became a neutral organization. For this reason the IDOCO-publications have not been registered here. *As for IDOCO-publications see Rainer Noltenius (ed): Illustrierte Geschichte p. 134-135: Viens Socialisme, Vereint aus manchem Land (4. Socialist Information and Liaison Office, SILO; International Socialist Conference

The outbreak of the Second World War in Western Europe in May 1940 destroyed the basis of the Labour and Socialist International which was not able to resume its functions. National groups of exiled Socialists were formed in London during the war, and their representatives frequently met under the auspices of the British Labour Party. In September 1944, its National Executive decided to study problems concerning "the future international association of democratic Labour and Socialist parties". After the end of the war, an informal international conference convened at Clacton-on-Sea in May 1946, "to re-establish contacts broken by the war, to exchange information and to work out, if possible, common policies on problems of common interest". The conference was attended by representatives of 19 Socialist/Social-Democratic parties. It set up a 'Socialist Information and Liaison Office', attached to the secretariat of the British Labour Party. Six months later, in November 1946, a second conference was held (Bournemouth), which established a Consultative Committee to act as a clearing-house for information, and to prepare future conferences. The third conference, held in Zurich in June 1947, was mainly devoted to a discussion of admission criteria. The fourth conference (Antwerp, November 1947) transformed the Consultative Committee into a more representative body called the Committee of the 'International Socialist Conference' (C.O.M.I.S.C.O.) composed of one representative from each member party.

Some material concerning the Socialist Information and Liaison Office was integrated into the records concerning the Socialist International that are kept in the IISG in Amsterdam. The most important archival material on this episode in the reconstruction of the Socialist International is to be found in the Special Collections of the Labour Party archives (National Museum of Labour History - Labour History Archive & Study Centre). They contain Morgan Philips' files; he played a prominent role in the 'Socialist Information and Liaison Office'. See also Richard A. Storey: Labour Party archives: Labour and Socialist International, listed by R.A. Storey and T.W.M. Jaine, Historical Manuscripts Commission, London 1973.

Internacional Socialista/Internationale Socialiste/Socialist International/Sozialistische Internationale

Successor of the Labour and Socialist International (1923-40), constituted at the Eighth International Socialist Conference in Frankfurt/Main in 1951. With the prospective members eager to ensure their autonomy, it took six years of negotiations to found a new social democratic international. At first only an information bureau was established (SILO, 1946-47), later the COMISCO (1947-51). The original objective of the Socialist International was to establish social justice within and between nations, and to end all forms of oppression. Its philosophy is based on the principles of democratic socialism. It is an important social democratic forum, but its decisions are not binding on its members. The SI, together with several Asian socialist parties, launched the Asian Socialist Conference, the Asian-Pacific Socialist Organization, in Africa the Interafricaine Socialiste et Democratique, and has several committees, some of them existing more or less permanently as the SI Committee for Latin America (SICLAC). From 1976 onwards, the position of the council chairman became more important when Willy Brandt held the post and the SI was revitalized. The secretariat of the Socialist International is situated in London.

In January 1993, the European Forum for Democracy and Solidarity was founded on the initiative of the Western European Social Democratic parties to support the transformation and democratisation processes in Central and Eastern Europe, and as a platform for co-operation with social democratic personalities and parties in the region. The Forum co-operates closely with the Socialist International, the Party of European Socialists and other social democratic Internationals, and is a part of the international social democratic network. The Forum publishes Country Updates on the countries in the region with background material difficult to obtain, a Newsletter/Calendar (no. 26/December 2000) and Annual Reports. The Forum intends to develop its coverage to include the countries of the Confederation of Independent States (<http://www.europeanforum.bot-consult.se>)

International Council of Social Democratic Women/Socialist International Women - Femmes d'Internationale Socialiste; Internacional Socialiste Mujeres; Sozialistische Fraueninternationale

After the Second World War and the downfall of the fascist regimes, the social democratic women re-established their international co-operation and held their first conference in Vienna 1948. But this co-operation did not receive sufficient support from the Socialist International, and the International Socialist Women's Conference in London 1955 accordingly founded the International Council of Social Democratic Women. In its statutes it was stated that the ICSDW is the association of women members or women's organizations belonging to Parties affiliated to the Socialist International. The ICSDW is an associated organization of the SI. At the Tenth Conference in Vancouver 1978, a decision was taken to change the name to the Socialist International Women. The ICSDW/SIW bureau is situated at the SI headquarters in London.

International Union of Socialist Youth IUSY/Internationale Union der sozialistischen Jugend/ L'Union Internationale de la Jeunesse socialiste

The IUSY was founded at a conference in 1946 by mostly European social-democratic youth organizations. In the next decades it was, on the one hand, pushed back to Western and Northern Europe, on the other, it was more successful than the SI in attracting membership in quite a lot of countries all over the world. A sort of 'official' history of IUSY's first 20 years is Radomir Luza: History of the International Socialist Youth Movement, A.W.Sijthoff, Leyden 1970. The IUSY headquarters are situated in Vienna.

According to Luza (p. 209 f) an international IUSY Information Bulletin was published in Spanish – the Bulletin was duplicated by the Spanish federation in 1948-50 and thereafter printed.

International Literary Agency/Internationale Literarische Agentur

The SI-bureau decided to call a conference of social democratic publishers, which convened at Heidelberg in June 1955. The organization had members in e.g. Austria, Denmark, Finland, Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland and perhaps other countries. The organization existed during the 1950s – conferences were held in Frankfurt, 1957, Vienna and Berlin, 1958 – and 1960s, at least its periodical did. The Agency participated in the exhibition 'The Socialist Book' in Brussels 1964 in connection with the 100th anniversary of the Socialist International, and planned to publish several books (SI Circular B 36/63).

International Friends of Nature/Internationale des Amis de la Nature/Naturfreunde-Internationale

The organization was founded in Vienna in 1895, but soon spread to the surrounding countries. Until 1950 the World organization [Weltverein] of the Friends of Nature could be called a centralized organization and did not become an International. After the first world war, the Friends of Nature existed in several European countries and in the USA where it had been founded by immigrants from the German-speaking countries. After 1933/34 political emigrants founded new organizations in other countries. In 1934 headquarters were forced to move to Switzerland where they remained until 1988 when they returned to Vienna. The International was formally founded in 1950 as a federation of nationally constituted organizations. After 1989/90 bonds to new and refounded members in Eastern Europe were established, but also to new organizations in Western Europe, Africa, Asia and Australia. The International is on its way to developing into a worldwide organization.

International Falcon Movement-Socialist Educational International/Internationale Falkenbewegung-Sozialistische Erziehungsinternationale/Movimento Internacional de los Halcones-Internacional de Educación Socialista/Mouvement international des Faucons Rouges-Internationale éducative socialiste

The ifm-sei traces its origins to the sei from the period 1922-1946. In 1947, the International Falcon secretariat was founded at a conference near Amsterdam, which at the same time formally wound up the old SEI. At the 8th congress in Vienna 1962, the development of a new International began, which came into being in 1970. The International Falcon movement decided to include in its name that it was a Socialist Educational International, and the organization has its own staff and office in Brussels.

International Federation of Worker's Education Associations, IFWEA/Internationaler Verband für Arbeiterbildung, IVA/Fédération internationale des associations pour l'éducation des travailleurs, FIAET

Beginning in 1922 the International Trade Union Federation held various conferences on workers' education, and plans for more formalised co-operation were being discussed but only after the second world war was the IFWEA founded in London in October 1947, and already in its first ten years included Workers' Educational Associations in various countries outside Europe. In this it benefitted from the connections that the English WEA had to organizations in the Dominions. Until 1969, and again from 1977 to 1986, the IFWEA headquarters were located at the WEA in London; when this was not the case, headquarters were in Germany, Sweden, Austria, Israel and Norway. In 1996 IFWEA had over 60 members in many countries and, accordingly, it was decided in 1992 to regionalize IFWEA.

An IFWEA archive including some of its publications exists at the University of North London Learning Centre (TUC Collections). Archival material relating to IFWEA may be found in the archives of the national organizations. The FES holds a substantial collection in the Deutscher Gewerkschafts Bund papers.

Reports of the General conferences in 1977 (Dublin), 1980 (Oslo), 1983 (UNESCO, Paris) were published in duplicated form like the one from the Vienna conference 1986. One or two Seminars a year were also held, and several reports produced. For the time being none of these reports have been located, with the exception of the Vienna General Conference 1986. This also applies to the short reports of the Conferences in 1968, 1972, and 1974, respectively.

International Union of Socialist Educators (I.U.S.E.)/Internationale Union Sozialdemokratischer Erzieher (I.U.S.D.E.)/Union Internationale des Educateurs Socialistes (U.I.E.S.)

The IUSE was founded at a conference in 1951 and is, in principle, a worldwide International but originally mostly West-European organizations became members; however, it has members and contacts in up to thirty countries. ISUE is an associated member of the SI. According to the editorial in the "IUSDE Report" no. 1 (1981), nothing was published by the IUSE before this first number. The IUSE organises thematic conferences almost every year. Moreover, it has prepared a programme for socialist education. In December 1970 it founded the 'Commission of Socialist Teachers in the European Union', whose publications are included in the bibliography. In 1992, two other commissions were founded: the 'Commission of Socialist Teachers in Latin America' and the 'Commission of Socialist Teachers in Africa'.

There is no archive, but various papers may be found in the archive of Piet van den Eynde, chairman 1973-1976, in the AMSAB. Likewise some papers from the 1960s to the 1990s are in the ABA .

Ayuda Obrera Internacional (AOI)/Entraide Ouvrière Internationale(EOI)/International Workers Aid (IWA)/Internationales Arbeiter-Hilfswerk (IAH) Renamed in 1994: Solidar (International Workers Aid)/Solidar (Internationales Arbeiter-Hilfswerk)/Solidar (Ayuda Obrera Internacional)/Solidar (Entraide Ouvrière Internationale)

The International was originally founded in London in 1948, but did not succeed in organising its work. The Belgian Socialist Party initiated new discussions, and the actual founding congress was held in 1951; the organization became an affiliated member of the Socialist International; many of the member organizations still maintain links to trade unions and social democratic parties. 1951-1954 headquarters were located in Belgium, 1955 to 1970 at the Schweizerisches Arbeiterhilfswerk and from 1970 to 1995 at the Arbeiterwohlfahrt in Germany. Since the reorganization in 1995 Solidar has its own office in Brussels where the surviving archives of the organization are kept.

Asian Socialist Conference

Asian Socialist Conference (1953-60) /Asian Socialist International Bureau

On the occasion of the Asian Relations Conference, held in Delhi in 1947, leading members of the Socialist Parties of Burma, India and Indonesia, at an informal meeting, discussed the need and the possibility of the Socialist Parties of Asia meeting to discuss common problems and exchange experience. But only five years later, in September 1951, representatives of the Socialist Party of India (later the Praja Socialist Party) and the Social Democratic Party of Japan met in Tokyo and, in a joint statement, urged the calling of a conference of all Asian Socialist Parties. In December of the same year, representatives of the Progressive Socialist Party of Lebanon and the Socialist Party of India met in Delhi and issued a joint manifesto, urging the Asian Socialist Parties to co-operate. Subsequently representatives of the Burma Socialist Party, the Socialist Party of India and the Partai Sosialis Indonesia met in Rangoon in March 1952 in a preparatory meeting. It decided to convene a conference of Asian Socialist Parties in January 1953 in Rangoon and appointed a preparatory committee for the organization of the Conference. The First Conference of the Socialist Parties of Asia resolved to establish the Asian Socialist Conference as an Independent, international Socialist organization with headquarters in Rangoon. U Ba Swe, General Secretary of the Burma Socialist Party, was elected Chairman of the Asian Socialist Conference. Dissolved in the 1960. No archival sources are known.

Asia-Pacific Socialist Organization (APSO)

The first conference of this second attempt to establish a regional organization of the Socialist International in Asia and the Pacific was held in Sydney, Australia, in February 1981. The second conference was held in Kuala Lumpur in 1985, but also this conference had no decisive effect on further co-operation. In 1988 the Australian and New Zealand Labour Parties founded a new 'Association of South Pacific Progressive Parties'. After the SI Congress 1996 in New York, it was decided to regroup and the 'Socialist International Asia-Pacific Committee' was founded. There are no known archival collections for the APSO.

Socialist Union of Central-Eastern Europe/Sozialistische Union Mittel-und Osteuropas/L'Union Socialiste de l'Europe Centrale et Orientale

Founded in 1949 in London by representatives of Bulgarian, Czechoslovak, Hungarian, Polish and Yugoslav Social-Democratic parties in exile. Parties from the Baltic republics, Ukraine and Rumania joined later. The organization aimed to inform the public in the Eastern European countries about democratic socialism, to promote the unification of Europe and to render mutual support in other international organizations. The organization held annual congresses nearly every year; after the 10th congress in Hamburg 1959 a series of booklets was published. According to the material in the IISG the last congress was held in 1982 in Bonn; the organization had serious financial difficulties, but it was still in existence in 1990. In some ways the work of the SUCEE is continued in the SI Committee for Central and Eastern Europe

Although SUCEE was officially founded in 1949, material from 1948 has been included IISG: A collection of material in the IISG, Amsterdam covering the years 1948-1982.

The political organizations of the European Socialists

The language of this part of the bibliography is English, which means that only the English-language titles of the publications are listed in the bibliography; if they have not been found, other language versions have been included. It will, however, be indicated which of the texts have been published in the other (5 or 11 + Norwegian) languages used by the PES or by its Parliamentary Group insofar as they have been found.

Social-Democratic/Socialist parties began their co-operation with the founding of the 'European Coal and Steel Community' and its parliamentary organ, The Common Assembly, in 1952. Already before this, the Socialist International had created a 'special commission', which worked out a common ten point policy regarding the Coal and Steel plan. The Socialist Faction first met in September 1952 and was officially founded in June 1953; it set up a Bureau and a permanent Secretariat - the 'Socialist Group at the European Coal and Steel Community' - in Luxemburg, the seat of the Common Assembly. In 1957 the Social-Democratic parties of the six states in the E.C.S.C. decided to establish closer co-operation between the parties and the faction, the Socialist Inter-Group at the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe in Strasbourg. This institution, the 'Liaison Bureau of the Socialist Parties of the European Community', held several inter-party conferences, later called congresses, during the following years as well as some special conferences as and when needed. In 1974 - after Denmark, Great Britain and Ireland had joined the European Community - the next step was taken and the Liaison Bureau was transformed into the 'Confederation of the Socialist Parties of the European Community' (the Labour Party joined in 1976), which body was to have importance beyond co-ordinating the policies of the various parties. But still it was a confederation not a new party. It took 18 years with many discussions and the development of the 'European Community' to the 'European Union' with all its institutions before this new 'Party of European Socialists' was launched in 1992. The PES has (1999) 20 Full Members, two Associate Parties (Iceland and Switzerland) and eleven Observer Parties. In addition to the Parliamentary Group of the PES, there are two Associations, the European Community Organization of Socialist Youth (ECOSY) and the Committee of the Regions – Group of the Party of the European Socialists. The purpose of the PES is not to replace the member parties but to be a forum for discussion and preparation of decisions.

A sort of official history was published by the PES-Secretariat: Simon Hix: A History of the PES 1957-1994. A contribution, Brussels 1995, 32 p.(2nd edition, 2000) - also available at:

In January 1993 the European Forum for Democracy and Solidarity was founded on the initiative of the Western European Social Democratic parties to support the transformation and democratisation processes in Central and Eastern Europe and as a platform for cooperation with social democratic personalities and parties in the region. The Forum co-operates closely with the Socialist International, the Party of European Socialists and other social democratic Internationals and is a part of the international social democratic network. The Forum publishes Country Updates on the countries in the region with difficult obtainable background material, a Newsletter/Calendar (no. 26/December 2000) and Annual Reports. The Forum intends to develop its coverage to include the countries of the Confederation of Independent States (<http://www.europeanforum.bot-consult.se>)
