Democracy means Participation

In November 2007, the Jordanians elected their new parliament for the next four years. However, democratic participation does not end but only begins with participating in elections. Democracies are built on the citizens' ongoing and continuous participation.

Persons who have been elected to represent the voters have to act in a transparent manner and have to implement the programs presented during the election process. It hence lies in the voters' responsibility to follow up on how political decision makers are acting on their election pledges and ensure an ongoing dialogue between representatives and the people they represent. It is only by this means, and with the support and the consent of the electorate, that governance can attain genuine legitimacy. Without this legitimacy and without comprehensive public participation in the political process, no system of governance truly deserves to be labelled democratic.

Designed for decision-makers, civil society actors and for individuals inside and outside of Jordan, this Guide to Jordanian Political Life is truly unique in its scope. It comprises information on political decision makers in Parliament and in all Government ministries. It gives an overview over political parties, trade unions and also comprises information on professional associations in Jordan. Thus, it covers all aspects of Jordanian politics.

One important objective of the Guidebook is to present the members of the new Parliament. Readers will be provided with contact information and the political programs of each MP. Furthermore, each ministry and various other political actors in Jordan are presented in a well-assorted and easily accessible way.

Taking account of the notion of ownership, the Guide for Jordanian Political Life has been created by Jordanians for Jordanians. The Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung would particularly like to thank the authors of the Phoenix Center for Economic and Information Studies for their excellent work and their devotion to this project. In addition, FES would like to stress that the implementation of this project would not have been possible without continuous encouragement and support from the Jordanian political actors themselves. Hence, we would like to express our sincere gratitude to the speaker of the Jordanian Parliament, H.E. Abdul-Hadi al-Majali, who kindly assisted and facilitated the development of this publication. Simultaneously, FES would like to thank all Ministry executives, Members of Parliament, representatives of political parties, trade unions and professional associations who dedicated a considerable amount of time and effort to assure that the information published is correct and comprehensive.

To point out this transparent and participatory procedure in writing the book seems imperative with regard to the question of objectivity. The authors are well aware of the fact that in order to safeguard political neutrality, only the political actors themselves were qualified and entitled to determine their presentation in this Guidebook. Obviously, this procedure induces that the responsibility for the published information ultimately rests with the respective persons themselves.

The Guidebook aims at strengthening democratic participation in the political process but also attempts to foster international cooperation between Jordanian and international actors. For this reason, the book is also available in an English edition.

Introduction

This guide comes as a basic reference for major political players in Jordan, represented by members of lower and upper houses, the government, represented by ministries, in addition to political parties, and trade unions and professional associations. In this guide, full information about members of the upper house have been presented, like their CVs, mailing addresses, phone numbers, and the standing committees they operate through; concerning lower house members, in addition to their CVs, we presented a summary of their political, social, and economic programs, which we received from different sources, some deputies sent their electoral programs, others have presented a written summary, for the rest of them, we have analyzed their speeches which they presented during the parliament discussions for the confidence voting for the government, in addition to their speeches during the parliament discussion for the 2008 general budget.

Concerning the government, all operating ministries in Eng. Nader Al-Dahabi's cabinet have been presented, also the objectives, address, e-mail, phone numbers and current minister's name for each ministry have been presented. Concerning the Jordanian political parties, all the parties that corrected its legal status according to the new political parties law, have been presented, the total number is fourteen political parties; their information included date of establishment, address, phone numbers, names of general assembly members, and a small summary for its political program and organizational structure. Concerning trade unions and professional associations, the information included date of establishment, objectives, names of councils members and elected general assembly.

In addition to that, the guide includes a historical and present introduction to parliamentary life, in addition to going through parliament members electing and working mechanisms. The guide also includes listing names, functions and members of upper and lower houses standing committees.

It is expected that this guide will be useful to all political players in Jordan, upper house members, deputies, ministers, parties members, unions members, researchers, and media people, in addition to Arab, regional, and international organizations; because such a publication presents an updated database about the major political players in Jordan

In the end, we hope that this guide will be helpful and useful to all political and social sides in Jordan, and we would like to thank all those who participated in preparing it from upper house members, deputies, political parties leaders, directors of trade unions and professional associations, who's without their cooperation this guide wouldn't have seen the light; in addition to the cooperation of a lot of upper and lower houses officials, and we would like to mention general secretary of the upper house Dr. Khalaf Al-Hmesat, general secretary of the lower house, Mr. Fayez Al-Shawabkah, in addition to Mr. Mohammad Al-Husseni, Mr. Jameel Hamad, Mr. Salman Naqrash; and the field researchers who continued working till the last moment before sending the draft to the printing press, especially Ms. Huda Yousef, Ms. Abeer Fouad, and also the book designer Ms. Maya Al-Shami, and the special thanks is to our partners in preparing this guide, the Friedrich Ebert Stiftung.

The House of Parliament in the Jordanian Political Life

Historical introduction

With the end of WWI and the defeat of the Ottoman state, both Britain and France shared power over land that was once part of the Ottoman state, under the terms of the Sykes-Picot agreement which was signed by France and Britain in 1916. The land mentioned in this agreement is what used to be called “East Jordan” under the British leverage. The Sykes-Picot agreement coincided with the arrival of the Great Arab Revolt’s forces, lead by Al-Sharif Al-Hussein Bin Ali, launched in Mecca against the Ottoman state. In 1921, Prince Abdullah Bin Al-Hussein (King Abdullah I) established the Emirate of Transjordan under the British mandate which continued until the end of WWII in 1946 when Britain acknowledged Jordan an independent state, whilst maintaining a treaty to manage the relationships between the two countries. Jordan’s independence was declared in May 1946 as “The Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan”. A few months after the establishment of the state of Israel in 1948 on part of the Palestinian lands, the union between the two banks was declared, and the West Bank became part of the kingdom. In 1967, Israel occupied the West Bank, in the Huzeiran War (June war), in addition to Sinai, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights.

The governing system of Jordan’s parliament has a hereditary monarchy, which is referred to in the Jordanian constitution. According to the constitution, the governing system consists of three authorities, the executive power lead by the king who practices his executive powers through the prime minister and the cabinet. The cabinet is accountable by the elected parliament. The legislative authority is lead by the parliament and the king; the parliament consists of the lower house which is elected by the people, and the upper house which is appointed by the king. The judiciary power is entrusted with courts of different types and levels.

Despite the Jordanian constitution, which was approved in 1952 by the Jordanian parliament, and which states in article 24 that “the nation is the source of all powers”, several years in the history of Jordan passed without having an elected parliament for the period 1964 to 1984. Supplementary elections were held in 1984. The kingdom had been ruled under martial law, the executive power dominated both legislative and judicial powers, which continued until the late 1980s, in addition to several aspects of life through the passing of many temporary laws which regulated all aspects of living.

As a result of the Jordanian economic crises in the late 1980s, the value of the Jordanian dinar dropped. This was due to the increase of the budget deficit and shortages in the current balance of expenses. Another reason was the state’s inability to settle its foreign loans because of the lack of reserve funds at the Central Bank of Jordan. These led to many more needs in the main cities in the kingdom. As a result, the official circles were pushed to return to the constitution, martial law was cancelled, there was a tangible relief in the political life and parliamentary elections were held at the end of 1989.

The return to the constitution and the canceling of martial law did not lead to a democratic political life as was predicted by the political players in Jordan, such as political parties, civil society organizations and democratic politicians. The momentum by which the political reform process started during the first five years of the return of democratic life did not last, and it was not long before elections law was amended to the so-called “the one vote law”, which has led to the weakening of the role of political parties and their gradually pulling out of parliament. This came in addition to imposing many temporary laws during the postponement of parliamentary elections or in the transitional period between one parliament and another. Many laws limiting public freedoms were passed, such as ‘the public meetings law’ and ‘the charity organizations law’, among other laws. The interference of the government in the work of civil society organizations, public life and the political parties is still felt by those who are working in or actively involved in public affairs.

The Jordanian House of Parliament:

The legislative authority in Jordan is represented by the parliament, which consists of the upper and lower houses. The upper house is formed by less than half the number of deputies in the lower house (those are appointed by the king). They must have completed forty calendar years of age and must belong to one of the following classes: present and former Prime Ministers and Ministers, persons who had previously held the office of Ambassador, Minister Plenipotentiary, Speaker of the Chamber of Deputies, President and judges of the Court of Cassation and of the Civil and Sharia Courts of Appeal, retired military officers of the rank of Lt. General and above, former Deputies who were elected at least twice as deputies, and other similar personalities who enjoy the confidence of the people in view of services rendered by them to the Nation and the Country. ¹

The Chamber of Deputies shall consist of members elected by secret ballot in a general direct election and in accordance with the provisions of Electoral Law.² The term of office of the Chamber of Deputies shall be four calendar years commencing from the date of the announcement of the results of the general elections in the Official Gazette. The King may, by a Royal Decree, prolong the term of the Chamber for a period of not less than one year and not more than two years.³ A general election shall take place during the four months preceding the end of the term of the Chamber. If the election has not taken place by the end of the term of the Chamber or if such election is delayed for any reason, the Chamber shall remain in office until the election of a new Chamber.⁴ The King may dissolve the Chamber of Deputies.⁵

If the Chamber of Deputies is dissolved, a general election shall be held, and the new Chamber shall convene in an extraordinary session not later than four months from the date of dissolution. Such a session shall be deemed to be an ordinary session. If no elections have taken place by the end of the four months, the dissolved Chamber shall assume its full constitutional powers and assemble forthwith as if its dissolution had not taken place.⁶ In spite of this, the modifications that took place on the Jordanian constitutional literature give the king the right to delay public elections in the light of extraordinary circumstances and upon a decision taken by the council of ministers that the circumstance does not allow holding the elections.⁷ If such circumstances continue, the king reserves the right, upon a decision the council of ministers, to call the dismissed council of deputies and invite it to be held again.⁸ In addition to this, if the Chamber of Deputies is dissolved for any reason, the new Chamber cannot be dissolved for the same reason.⁹

The King shall summon the National Assembly to an ordinary session on the first day of October of each year or, if that day is an official holiday, on the first day following the official holiday, provided that the King may, by Royal Decree published in the Official Gazette, postpone for a period not exceeding two months the meeting of the Assembly to a date to be fixed by the Royal Decree.¹⁰ The King may by Royal Decree adjourn the session of the National Assembly no more than three times, provided that during any one session the period of such postponement shall not exceed two months in the aggregate, including the period of postponement. In computing the term of the session.¹¹

The King may whenever necessary summon the National Assembly to meet in an extraordinary session for an unspecified period for the purpose of deciding matters to be specified in the Royal Decree when the summons are issued. An extraordinary session shall be prorogued by a Royal Decree. The King may also summon the National Assembly to meet in an extraordinary session at the request of an absolute majority of the deputies. Such requests shall be contained in a petition specifying the matters it wishes to discuss.¹²

The Chamber of Deputies shall have the right to determine the validity of the election of its members. Any voter shall have the right to present a petition to the Secretariat of the Chamber within fifteen days of the announcement of the results of the election in his constituency setting out the legal grounds for invalidating the election of any deputy. No election may be considered invalid unless it has been declared as such by a majority of two-thirds of the members of the Chamber.¹³ It is worth mentioning that in the history of the chamber of deputies there has never been an incident where a deputy's membership was found invalid according to this constitutional article.

The Historical Development of the Parliamentary Council:

Legislative work in the Emirate of Transjordan started on the 1st of April, 1923. The first council was established for the purpose of passing laws and regulations. In 1923, the first electoral law was written, and in 1926, few modifications were made to the law, and the first council was elected in the early 1928. The second council was elected in June 1931, and towards the end of September and October and the beginning of November 1934, the third elections took place. The fourth elections were held in 1937 and the fifth in September 1942 after modifying the electoral law, whereby more districts were added.

The last council declared the independence of Jordan, and pledged allegiance to King Abdullah Bin Al-Hussein I as the constitutional King of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan. This came after a second Jordanian British treaty by which, Britain declared the independence of the Emirate of Transjordan on the 22nd of March, 1946. In April 1947, the electoral law for the council of deputies was published, giving the right to all Jordanians 18 years old or older to vote. The council of deputies then consisted of twenty members elected directly by the people, and ten senators.

After the decision of unifying the east and west banks in the early 1950s, the second Jordanian council of deputies was formed, bringing together deputies and senators of the Kingdom's east and west banks. More changes were made to the constitution and the electoral law, by which time, the members of the council had doubled in size, with forty deputies and twenty senators.

During the period of the fifth council of deputies, a new electoral law was passed in 1960 increasing the total number of deputies to sixty deputies, thirty of which represented the east bank and thirty represented the west bank. The number of senators also increased to thirty senators.

On 5th June, 1967, war broke out resulting in the Israeli occupation of the West Bank. The council continued to operate completing its constitutional period and extending its operations for another two years, until 18th April 1973. This was followed by the Arab Summit Conference in Rabat in 1974 which considered the Palestinian Liberation Organization the legitimate and sole representative of the Palestinian people. Upon that, a royal decree was issued to dismiss the council on 23rd November 1974.

Consequently, a national advisory council was appointed, in order to “give opinion and advice and discuss the general policy of state, in co-operation with the government”. This council continued to work until a royal decree was issued to terminate the work of the council as of 7th January, 1984. Parliament was invited to resume its work in an exceptional on 9th January 1984. On 13th March 1984, by-elections were held to fill up the vacant seats in the house of deputies of the East bank, the council also elected members representing the vacant seats of the West bank.

On 31st July 1988, a decision was made to terminate legal and administrative links with the West Bank and a new amendment was applied to the electoral law to accommodate this new situation, whereby election districts were limited to those in the East Bank. Public elections took place on 8th November 1989 for the first time since 1967, according to the temporary electoral law amended from the electoral law no. 22 of the year 1986, and the 11th council of deputies was elected.

The 12th council of deputies was terminated on 4th August 1993 and new elections were held on 8th November 1993 according to the temporary electoral law passed on 17th August 1993, amended from the electoral law no. 22 of the year 1986. This states that each citizen has the right to one vote given to one candidate, replacing the former law where voters could vote for a number of candidates, equal to the allocated deputies in their electoral district.

On 4th November 1997, the 13th parliamentary elections took place according to a new temporary electoral law that called for a modification of how the electoral districts are distributed, in addition to a few other amendments to the mechanisms of elections. On 17th June 2003, the 14th parliamentary elections were held after being postponed for a year and a half, according to another temporary electoral law that increased the number of seats in the council of deputies from 80 to 110 seats. There was also an increase in the number of electoral districts, allocating six seats for women in addition to changing several articles related to the mechanisms of elections. On the 20th of November 2007, the 15th, and current council of deputies was elected according to the same electoral law followed during the 14th parliamentary elections in 2003.

The Roles and functions of the Council of Deputies:

The Council of Deputies plays a number of roles and carries out several tasks according to the Jordanian constitution and its internal system. The following is a brief listing of these roles and functions:

1. The Legislative Role

Legislation is the number one role of the house of deputies. This is done through stages and procedures such as: the forwarding of law projects or temporary laws to the council by the government in an official letter from the prime minister, attaching the law project or the temporary law and the reasons behind passing it, as issued by the council of ministers, requesting the project to be forwarded to the house of deputies for approval. This project could be urgent, upon the government's request or as seen by the council of deputies.¹⁴

The president of the council of deputies then puts the law project or temporary law into the council's agenda. No law project is presented for discussion by the council until copies of it are distributed to every deputy at least three days before the discussion begins. In case there are strong reasons that call for looking into the law urgently, the president of the council presents it to the council to make the appropriate decision. If the majority of the house of deputies approve it, the law is read and discussed publicly or delegated to the specialized committee as urgent, when it is discussed later in the council which has the freedom to approve, reject or amend it.¹⁵

In case a law is approved, the council then forwards it to the specialized committee, which carries out a detailed study of the law. The committee has the right to call the relevant minister who came forward with the proposal or anyone who they feel worth listening to in the matter, in addition to those affected by it and experts. Any specialized minister or person who presented the law proposal has the right to attend the sessions or the committee if they choose. The committee, in return, has the right to call whoever they need to see and be provided with documents and information necessary for the discussion of the law in question. If the minister chooses to boycott it, the committee brings the issue to the attention of the president of the council to have it presented to the council in the first session. This matter is given priority over the rest of tasks.

After discussing the law, and it has been approved by the committee, the opinion of the council is sought as a whole, and the council reserves the right to postpone the decision to a further session, so as to re-discuss one or several articles in the law. If the law is approved by the majority of those present, the president of the council then presents it to the president of the council of senate to finalize the constitutional proceedings. This procedure applies to law projects and temporary laws, but in the case of international agreements and treaties, the council has the right to approve or reject the project, without making any amendments. However, the council can postpone the study of the project, drawing the government's attention to what the council sees the project as lacking.

A group of a minimum of ten or more deputies can propose laws. The proposal is then forwarded to the appropriate committee in the council for their opinion, with reasons behind the suggestion and basic principles. If the council, after listening to the committee, accepts the suggestion, it forwards it to the government to put it in the format of a law project and present it to the council in the same cycle or in the following one.¹⁶

In all cases, the project should be presented to the house of senate. No law is passed unless both the lower and upper houses approve it and the King signs it.

2. The Monitoring Role

The monitoring role is considered to be the second task of the council of deputies, by which it monitors the work of the executive authority.¹⁷ The council of deputies has an internal system that determines the tools of parliamentary monitoring over the executive authority and the mechanism for using it. This is represented by:

a. Questions: the deputy can ask the prime minister and ministers for clarifications regarding any issues within their specialty. They can also ask for more information regarding an event that took place or inquire about the government's intentions and plans for a particular issue. This is done within the council's internal system.¹⁸

b. Interrogation: the deputy can hold the ministers, or one of them, accountable following a practice related to public affairs. The questioning is requested in writing and presented to the president of the council and should include all the issues that the deputy wishes to question the minister about. This is then listed in the council's agenda after two weeks. After the questioning takes place, the deputy reserves the right to lift their trust in the minister if unconvinced by his responses.¹⁹

c. General debate: where an exchange of opinions and advice takes place between the government and the council, a group of a minimum of ten deputies can request discussion of public matters. The government can do the same. Requests are made to the president of the council who will then place it on the agenda.²⁰

d. Expressing a wish: to request the government to carry out a task within the deputy's expertise. The suggestion has to be requested in writing and presented to the president of the council who then forwards it to the relevant committee. The committee then produces a report within a maximum of 15 days from receipt, stating approval or rejection. If the suggestion is approved and the house of deputies accepts it, they write to the prime minister who lets the council know of the verdict within a period of 30 days. The council can also ask for this period to be shortened.²¹

e. Petitions and grievances: the council of deputies handles and follows up on petitions and grievances made by citizens. Every citizen has the right to make a petition to the council regarding public affairs or a grievance that concerns them personally. The grievance or petition must have the citizen's name and address for the council's office to look at it and then forward it to the appropriate people.²²

f. Voting for confidence in the government: it is essential for the government's existence and continuation that the council of deputies grants it trust. A vote of confidence can happen either through a request made by the prime minister or by a minimum of ten deputies. The government, on formation, carries out a ministerial declaration, a plan that communicates the direction of the government and its programs. The government requests the trust of the council of deputies based on this declaration within a month from its formation, if the council is in session. If the council of deputies is not in session, the government can regard the throne speech as its declaration. Some governments, however, stick to the throne speech as their declaration even when the council is in session. After that, the council discusses these programs and plans in preparation for voting to grant confidence or no confidence.

g. Accusation of ministers: every minister is politically responsible in front of the council of deputies for all matters concerning their ministry. The council of deputies reserves the right to accuse ministers, an accusation that can only be issued if backed by at least two thirds of the votes. The council then appoints some of its members to make the accusation and support it in front of the higher council. The higher council consists of the president of the house of senate, three senators and five judges from the highest regular court.

h. Memos: although the internal system of the council of deputies does not mention memos, they have, however, been used in a number of councils and have become a parliamentary custom, making them one of the parliamentary monitoring tools. Memos are a petition signed by one or more deputies and presented to the president of the council with ideas about public cases or services for the electoral districts.

i. Current affairs item: the deputies practice their monitoring roles by listing some of the issues that deem appropriate and which concern public affairs. This is done as a part of the current affairs item that is usually listed on the agenda in every session of the council of deputies. The members might set a specific time to talk about important matters of urgency that cannot be delayed until presented in the council's session. The government's presence is requested in the session where the prime minister or the relevant minister can reply to the issues in question.

The mechanisms of electing deputies:

In addition to the constitutional articles which deal with what is required for those who wish to join the council of deputies, as already mentioned, the temporary electoral law no. 34 in 2001, and the modifications applied to it, provides a detailed electoral process, starting from the candidature up to the announcement of the results. The following is a brief overview of the key stages of the electoral process:

Elections have redefined the requirements that a person should have in order for him / her to join the council of deputies, whereby every Jordanian has the right of candidature for the elections as long as they are: not below thirty;²³ not claiming foreign citizenship or protection; have not declared bankruptcy without legally rectifying it; were charged with the charges not yet lifted; were sentenced to one year for a non-political felony, and not released; are believed to have interests in one of the government's departments as a result of a contract other than rental, not including to those who are partners in a company with at least ten more partners; not insane; not mentally retarded nor one of the King's relatives, the closeness of which is determined by a special law.²⁴ Many detailed requirements have been added, in addition: has been a Jordanian for at least ten years; not registered in the final voters' charts; not involved in any foreign political authority, party or organization.²⁵

Furthermore, certain government employees are not allowed to candidate themselves unless they have resigned before the date of candidature and their resignation accepted. Employees who fall under this category are employees of ministries; governmental departments; official public associations and commissions; Arab, regional and international commissions; the mayor of Amman; members in the Amman council; heads of municipal councils and its members and employees.²⁶

Candidature starts thirty days before the voting date, lasting for three days, after which no candidatures are accepted.²⁷ The law states that whoever wishes to candidate themselves must pay fees to the head of finance at their district of candidature to the amount of JD500, which will be deposited in the treasury and is non-refundable.²⁸

Advertisements and electoral campaigns:

Electoral law regulates electoral advertisement and campaigns, and clarifies their freedom according to the law. The law permits any candidate to start their campaign as soon as their candidature is accepted on the condition that: they do this according to the constitution; respecting superiority law; respecting freedom of opinion and thought; the preservation of national unity, homeland security and stability; non discrimination between citizens; not carrying out any promotional activity at ministries, official public institutions or departments; not sabotaging other candidates' campaigns, neither personally nor through associates in the campaign; refraining from carrying out promotional activities in places of worship, universities, educational institutions, state or private schools, main roads or buildings of ministries, official departments and organizations or those under state supervision.²⁹

Electoral law also permits candidates to distribute advertisements and electoral programs that contain the candidate's objectives, plans and strategies. Publications should have the candidate's real name and are not subject to licensing or fees. Governmental or official logos are not to be used in meetings, advertisements, electoral programs or any published materials, pictures or drawings, or as part of electoral programs. In the same way, no loudspeakers are allowed to be used outside closed halls or on public transport. In addition there are many other detailed conditions.³⁰

The Right to Vote:

According to current electoral law, any Jordanian above the age of 18 calendar years has the right to vote, as long as they have completed their 18th year by the first day of the first month of the election year, as long as their names was registered in one of the final voters lists. The law prohibits those actively working in the military, armed forces, police, fire departments, or intelligence from practicing this right as long as they are in the service.³¹

The Voting System:

Electoral law permits voters to vote in any of the polling or counting stations within their electoral district.³² On elections day voters go to the station they choose within their district to participate in voting in the presence of the voting and counting committees. The head of the committee or one of its members checks the voter's identity card beforehand and records their name and national number in a chart specifically designed for that purpose, then stamps the card in the allocated place and hands out a ballot paper to the voter. The voter then writes the name of the candidate they wish to elect; they can only write the name of one candidate. The voter then returns from the polling booth to place the card in the box in front of the committee and the people present to witness it. In the final step of the voting process, the voter is given their card back by the head of the committee, marked with a water stamp.³³ In the incident of a voter being illiterate, the voter delegates to the head of committee to write down the name of the candidate, who will then repeat it back to the voter, in the presence of the committee, and hand him the voting slip to place it in the box.³⁴

Vote counting and announcement of the results:

When the polling is over, and after a report has been organized by the committee for every polling box, the counting of votes begins, carried out by the committee and with people present to witness the counting process. The name of the candidate on the ballot paper is read out-loud and recorded on a board visible to all people present. A report is also prepared, in two copies, of the total number of voters participating per polling box, the total number of votes per candidate per box and the number of ballot papers the committee regards as invalid. The reports are then sent to the electoral district committee.³⁵ The number of votes is then calculated for each candidate and the final results of the elections are announced publicly by the head of the district committee in the presence of the candidates or their representatives. Finally, a report is prepared with the results, a copy of which, together with elections related documentation is sent to the central committee who then submit the results to the minister of interior.³⁶

The candidate who wins the elections is the one with the highest number of votes.³⁷ For the women quota, the committee determines the winners among female candidates based on the total number of votes they received, with no regard as to whether the candidate is Muslim, Christian, Circassian, Chechen or from the Bedouin districts.³⁸ The minister of interior then announces the general results of the elections, within a minimum of two days from the date of receiving the submitted reports, and publishes them in the official Gazette.³⁹

Characteristics of Deputies in the 15th Parliamentary Cycle:

The characteristics of deputies vary in age, sex, educational level, academic specialization and the countries from which they graduated. The house of deputies consists of: 19% of deputies who are above sixty years of age; 39% between fifty-one and sixty years; 34% between forty-one and fifty years and 8% between thirty and forty years of age.

Age groups of the deputies:

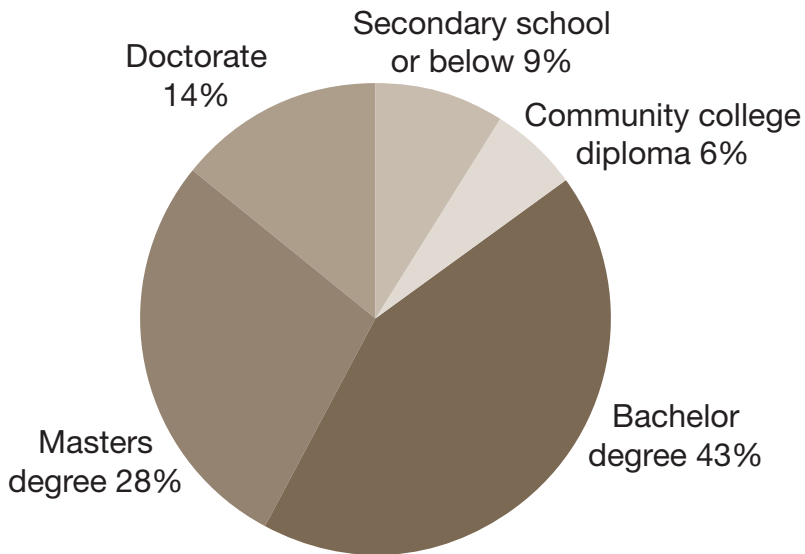

Sex of the deputies:

General features of the political, economical and social program:

To support the Palestinian people and do whatever is needed for their advocacy and the establishment of an independent Palestinian state. Economic reform can only progress if it is paralleled with political reform that deepens the freedom of expression and criticism, in addition to civil society organisations' participation for it represents an important section in society. Political parties and elections law are the fundamental pillar in political reform. He demanded the need to facilitate the authorization of parties and to quickly place a system to finance them in a way that supports the emergence of large national parties. To ensure there is a balance between the three authorities and amend the law of elections. To pay special attention to economic and social reform that aims at sustainable growth rates and reinforce competition in the Jordanian economy. To link salaries to inflation rates and production and performance indexes. To make healthy housing available and expand the umbrella of health insurance for all. To reach a fair security network and link all fees and taxes to the level of income of each family. To limit subsidising goods only to families in need.

Jordan Medical Association

General features of the political, economical and social program:

The government should only be criticised with great tact as it is situated between two occupations, the Israelis in the West and the Americans in the East. These positions will have to be within a clear Arab reference that takes into consideration the higher interests for the Arab nation. To give more support to the Palestinian authority in order to enable the people to establish their own independent state with Jerusalem as its capital. To stop separating deputy representation and ministries because parliamentary governments are more capable to cater to people's needs. To finalise the membership of the anti-corruption committee and review the law of political parties. Political reform should be reinforced founded on a comprehensive change that achieves social justice, equal opportunities, equality and abiding by the law. This should create a state of balance within economic, political and social challenges. He pointed out that Jordan is in need of a comprehensive national dialogue led by the council of deputies together with all civil society institutions and with the real participation of the government regarding the laws regulating political reform including the laws of elections, political parties, press and general meetings. To establish a constitutional court.

General features of the political, economical and social program:

All Arabs, Muslims and international society should stand face-to-face against the Israeli military machine that is killing, destroying and scattering innocent people, children, women and the elderly. To also stand up against the Israeli policy that is breaching all international decisions and agreements. It is important to hold Israel accountable for all these crimes in an international court. To lift the siege off the Palestinian people in order for them to live like other nations in the world on the soil of their homeland. The government should release Jordanians who are imprisoned in Israel, the USA, Iraq, Syria, Iran and Saudi Arabia. It is important to work together and gather all efforts in Jordan in order to guard its unity and social fabric. Regarding the social and economic aspects, he demanded that the raise of employees' salaries should be high enough to enable them to deal with the loads of life and ensure a good living for all citizens. It should also be linked to the inflation rates and should review the way rates are calculated in terms of consumer goods and their importance.

To support the Palestinian people and do whatever is needed for their advocacy and the establishment of an independent Palestinian state. Economic reform can only progress if it is paralleled with political reform that deepens freedom of expression and criticism, in addition to civil society organisations' participation for they represent an important section in society. Political parties and election law are the fundamental pillar in political reform. He demanded the need to facilitate the authorization of parties and to quickly place a system to finance them in a way that supports the emergence of large national parties. To ensure there is a balance between the three authorities and amend the law of elections. To pay special attention to economic and social reform that aims at sustainable growth rates and reinforce competition in the Jordanian economy. To link salaries to inflation rates and production and performance indexes. To make healthy housing available and expand the umbrella of health insurance for all. To reach a fair security network and link all fees and taxes to the level of income of each family. To limit subsidising goods only to families in need.

He demanded to stand up against what the Israeli occupation's government is committing against people in the Gaza Strip since Israel is violating their basic human rights under the world's shameful silence. With regards to economics, he demanded that the necessary preparations are made to offer an investment environment that can compete with what other Arab countries are offering to attract more investments, emphasising infrastructure and services provided to investors of specific industrial sectors. He also called for adopting small scale micro-projects in new residential areas to help residents to develop and improve their standard of living. He pointed out that it was necessary to build strategic reserves of crude oil enough to last a minimum of six months to make dealing with crises easier. He also criticised some of the economic policies that negatively affect the economic stability of people, such as pegging the JOD to the USD and restructuring of taxes. He emphasised the importance of using technology to improve agricultural production and the efficiency of the sector which in turn will improve the national economy. He demanded that financial support should be given to state universities and a student fund for those distinguished students in need and that the government should transfer all extra and customs fees to the benefit of state universities without putting tuition fees up. He emphasised the importance of following the global standard of care in the management of hospitals and health centres so as to increase their efficiency and prevent wasting public money.

4. Peace and Solidarity Organisation

General features of the political, economical and social program:

He confirmed his support to Jordanian efforts to reach a fair political settlement that guarantees the recovery of Arab rights and the establishment of a Palestinian independent state with Jerusalem as its capital. He declared his support of the official policy that supports Palestinian legitimacy and asked the Palestinians to put the national interest of the Palestinian people on top of any other interest. He pointed out that the new government came to crown a new era in the political life; this stage is founded on freezing political and democratic reform and continuing economic and social transformation from a liberal perspective that is based on economic openness and the liberation of the market and the marginalisation of the state's role in social care. He emphasised the importance of not applying extremism in privatisation and economic openness in addition to economic and market. He added that economic liberation is in need of political liberation that guarantees transparency and monitoring within organisation and expression, the absence of which will cause the economic powers to dominate and seek growing their earning and privileges, he demanded to give way to political and economic reforms. To revive the role of the state in social care, a role that has decayed over the past years, which has cost common, labour and poor groups dearly. To encourage the participation of political parties in main political movements and to quickly pass a law for financing political parties. To develop electoral law in a way that reinforces participation and competition on a political and programmatic basis.
